

ABSTRACT

A method for generating a predictor of failure of a manufacturing process. The predictor is generated by generating a candidate solution for the predictor and then determining a fitness of the candidate solution using fitness cases pertaining to the manufacturing process and a set of costs associated with the manufacturing process. The fitness may then be used to formulate a next generation of candidate solutions for a design method modeled on evolution.